

Community Choices presents:

Influencing The Health of Our Community: The Role of Health Professionals In Promoting Health Outside the Office

What to Expect:

Dr. Maxine Hayes, Washington State Health Officer and Dr. Alan Melnick, Clark County Health Officer will address physicians, physician assistants, nurse practitioners, and other health professionals, recognizing their commitment to delivering excellent care while considering the impact of social factors on their patients.

Objectives:

- Participants will explore the social and economic factors associated with common health issues seen in their office.
- Participants will identify how health professionals can work with community partners in addressing the social and economic factors that effect their patients' health.
- Participants will identify ways in which they, as recognized health authorities, can influence individuals, community groups and policy makers.
- Develop ideas for organized health professional activities to address the root causes of health and illness in Clark County.
